ment yesterday that some members of the Harvard faculty the CIA should report that to their deans; faculty memtions with the CIA, combined with his suggestion that should publicly notify the university of that activity: re-

First, it should be noted that Harvard's decision to sion of that student. draft rules governing the relations between its faculty; Adm. Turner suggests these rules are discriminatory and the agency was hardly prompted by some fuzzy- because they don't apply to any other potential employer the CIA's covert use of academics - both to supply intel-and not the CIA, to enforce them. Finally, Turner notes, ble CIA employment - raised troubling questions, and it the CIA on college campuses. was the committee that recommended the CIA should be more forthcoming with universities.

Second, the rules were drafted by persons not blind to the needs of government. They included Archibald Cox and Don Price, former dean of the Kennedy School of Government. The committee on which these men served succinctly summarized its reasoning

"The existence on the Harvard campus of unidentified individuals who may be probing the views of others and obtaining information for the possible use of the CIA is inconsistent with the idea of a free and independent university. Such practices inhibit free discourse and are a distortion of the relationship that should exist among members of an academic community, and in particular of the relationship that should exist between faculty members and students."

tively straightforward rules governing the behavior of its carefully.

CIA Director Adm. Stansfield Turner's acknowledge- faculty. Faculty members who consult on contract with ty are willfully violating Harvard's rules on faculty relationers who recruit students for possible CIA employment the situation really does not bother the agency much, is cruiters should not recommend the name of any student extremely troubling. to the CIA for possible employment without the permis-

headed thinkers jogging along the banks of the Charles, of university personnel; further, he argues, they are It was the Senate Intelligence Committee that suggested Harvard's rules, not the CIA's, and it is up to Harvard, ligence analysis and to recruit foreign students for possi-nothing in federal law prohibits the secret activities of

> Of course. Turner is correct in all respects. Yet, even he must see at least the potential for a chilling effect on academic discussion if it is thought that faculty members are quietly in the employ of the CIA, a chilling effect that simply would not exist if faculty members were thought to be employed secretly by say, IBM or the Agricultural.

> Beyond this, there is a serious question whether the CIA, in dealing with the employees of a private institution, should knowingly countenance activities that violate the wholly legal employment policies of that private institution, just because it is not the CIA's obligation to enforce those policies.

Harvard President Derek Bok has declared, "I do not believe that an agency of the United States should act in Proceeding from that rationale, the committee pro- this fashion." We agree. The congressional committees posed — and the university eventually adopted — related drafting a charter for the CIA must weigh the Bok view